About Theme

"Drug resistance has become a major global healthcare challenge, reducing the effectiveness of antimicrobial, anticancer, antiviral, and other therapeutic agents, and resulting in increased disease burden, mortality, and healthcare costs.

Through this theme we encourage D.Pharm, B.Pharm, and M.Pharm students to explore the scientific, clinical, and societal aspects of drug resistance through innovative models, posters, and oral presentations. Participants may focus on mechanisms of resistance, contributing factors, therapeutic challenges, and emerging strategies such as novel drug discovery, combination therapy, nanotechnology, pharmacogenomics, and rational drug use.

The competition aims to promote critical thinking, research aptitude, and creativity among pharmacy students, while inspiring them to develop sustainable solutions and bridge academic learning with real-world healthcare needs.
